PART 4

Read the text and answer the questions from 13 to 16. (Reading comprehension).

When making suggestions, it is common to use modal verbs such as "could", "should", and "might". For example, "You could try the new restaurant down the street" or "We should go to the beach this weekend". Modal verbs are used to express possibility, ability, permission, and obligation. It is important to choose the appropriate modal verb based on the context and the level of formality. For example, "may" is more formal than "can", and "must" is more forceful than "should". Using modal verbs can help make suggestions in a polite and effective way. For instance, John is planning a trip to Europe. He is considering different destinations and activities. Here are some of his thoughts and suggestions: "I could visit Paris and see the Eiffel Tower. It would be a great opportunity to experience the city's rich history and culture." "I should try the local cuisine in Italy. I've heard that Italian food is delicious, and it would be a shame to miss out on that experience." "I might go hiking in the Swiss Alps. The breathtaking views and fresh mountain air would be a perfect way to connect with nature." "I must remember to pack warm clothes for the trip. The weather in Europe can be unpredictable, and I don't want to be caught unprepared." "I can take a boat tour along the canals in Amsterdam. It would be a unique way to explore the city and admire its beautiful architecture." John is excited about his upcoming trip and is open to suggestions from his friends and family. He wants to make the most of his time in Europe and create unforgettable memories.

13. What are modal verbs commonly used for?
14. What are some examples of modal verbs?
